In Appreciation

The director, on behalf of the Superintendents of both Academies, wishes to convey their thanks and appreciation to his Excellency A. Harry Moore, Governor of New Jersey, the Hon. Meyer Ellenstein, Mayor of Newark, N. J., the Advertisers, the Manhattan College Band, the Bert Lamb Legions, the Carl Flink Milk Fund and the many fine friends, who have gone out of their way to make the Little Army-Navy Game the success that it is.

THE LITTLE ARMY - NAVY GAME

by Lieutenant Andrew K. Dutch, Director

THE first football classics were born rather than made. Yale and Harvard provided one of the first of these annual football milestones, Army and Navy provided another; both of these were associated with the historic rivalry of the participating teams rather than with any circumstances of time or place.

As football traveled westward on the trail of the covered wagon, other classic annual games developed, waxed, and some of them waned. Minnesota and Wisconsin always give a thrill to the fan; so do Army and Notre Dame. From time to time the reign of some particular star put his team in the limelight for two or three years. Walter Eckersall did that for Chicago, Red Grange did it for Illinois, Larry Kelly did it for Yale.

More recent is the vogue of the "Bowls," Roses and Sugar, for example. Great games are played in these bowls, great games will be played elsewhere, but the fixed star in the firmament of annual football classics is the struggle between the Army and the Navy.

There are many reasons for this. The two services are very close to the hearts of the American people, the thrill of the marching regiments on the field is as quickening to the blood of the spectator as are the games themselves and both West Point and Annapolis breed good teams, that play real football from whistle to whistle.

Five years ago a new football classic was born. A child of the Army-Navy battle. In personnel and in date it is a proper curtain raiser for the greater classic. It is called the Little Army-Navy Game.

La Salle Military Academy is the Prep School that provides West Point with many of its Cadets; Admiral Farragut Naval Academy performs the same service for Annapolis. For four years the football teams of Admiral Farragut Naval Academy and a Little Army team, have been meeting on the gridiron, each upholding the honor of the service which claims the ambitions of its students. The series are tied at two all.

The 1937 game was played at the Municipal Stadium in Philadelphia, Pa., before a crowd of 50,000 persons. Enthusiasm of the crowd gave birth to another great football classic, "The Little Army-Navy Game." The working director is Lieut. Andrew K. Dutch, Naval Aide-De-Camp to former Governor Harold G. Hoffman of New Jersey. The Honorary Directors are the Rev. Brother Ambrose, Superintendent of LaSalle Military Academy, Major Paul A. Knight, U.S.A., also of LaSalle, who represent the Little Army, and Rear Admiral S. S. Robison, U.S.N., Retired, Brig. Gen. Cyrus Radford, U.S.M.C., Retired, who represent the Little Navy, or Admiral Farragut Naval Academy. The mere civilian is represented by the Honorable Harold G. Hoffman, a Major in the U.S.A. Reserves, and Lieut. Com. George C. Warren, Jr., President of the New Jersey Fish and Game Commission, and an outstanding sportsman.

Interest has grown during the comparatively short history of this budding classic. Followers of the Army and Navy football fortunes seem to value this opportunity for a preview of the future stars who may a year or two later perform on the cliffs above the Hudson, or beside the placid Severn.

THE BACKGROUND AND HISTORY OF L. S. M. A.

La Salle Military Academy, formerly Clason Point Military Academy, the first private Catholic Boarding Academy in the environs of New York City, was founded as Westchester Institute in 1883 by the Brothers of the Christian Schools, a congregation of lay Religious exclusively devoted to the Christian Education of boys. The Clason Point property was originally the country estate of Dominick Lynch, one of the outstanding Catholic Citizens of New York City in the later decades of the eighteenth century. Holy Mass was first said in Westchester County in the home of Dominick Lynch, friend of George Washington.

For many years the Academy was the only Catholic Military School east of the Mississippi River and the story of its development and progress is a narrative which the limitations of space will not allow us to tell here. However, the Academy achieved National Recognition and Honors in Scholastic and Military Circles.

Because post war developments in Westchester trespassed on the quiet environment so necessary for intellectual progress and the physical well being of the student body, the Board of Trustees in 1926 purchased one hundred sixty acres of the Commodore Bourne estate at Oakdale, Long Island on the Great South Bay. There a modern dormitory building and school were erected to amplify the magnificent facilities of Indian Neck Hall, the palatial Bourne residence. In 1927, the personnel and equipment of Clason Point Military Academy were transferred to the new site, when the gorgeously beautiful grounds and buildings were dedicated to Saint John Baptist de la Salle, the originator of modern boarding school education, and present day class instruction.

Situated fifty miles from New York City on the Great South Bay, La Salle

Military Academy today is recognized by admiring visitors as one of the most beautiful environments for the education of growing youth. The Campus, the foliage, the splendid facilities, the conveniences, all contribute in this cultured environment to the development of Christian gentlemen, who shall take their respective places in the life of the Nation, "to do and dare" for God and Country, living exemplars of the Academy Motto, "Religio, Mores, Cultura."

HISTORY OF ADMIRAL FARRAGUT NAVAL ACADEMY

A School for Young Sailors

THE incorporators of the Admiral Farragut Academy believe that a useful purpose is served by a school in which sound courses of study are supplemented by a system of drills and exercises, patterned on those of the U. S. Naval Academy and supervised and conducted by Naval Academy graduates.

Such a curriculum is well calculated to turn out young men with sound minds in sound bodies, imbued with love of country, of the navy, and its traditions, and well fitted to enter the government academies, colleges, or civil life.

The Academy opened its first term September 23, 1933 with 56 cadets. Its growth has been noteworthy, enrollment for the past year reached the 200 mark.

Its physical plant on land and water has been improved and increased to accommodate the growth of the corps. A gymnasium was erected during the first year. Last year, an additional dormitory and academic building was completed. The new building, du Pont Hall, has heating plant, physical laboratory, and rifle range in the basement, class rooms on the first deck, dormitory rooms on the second and third decks, and a well-equipped sick bay.

The Academy possesses a sizeable fleet of small craft for nautical training, comprising a 110-foot former Navy subchaser, powered with a 210 h. p. diesel motor; twelve cat rigged Barnegat Bay sneak boxes; three sixteen-foot Marconirigged sloops; five regulation twenty-eight-foot navy cutters, which carry an auxiliary schooner rig; three merchant marine type life boats, three wherries, two motor-boats, and miscellaneous small pulling boats.

Director of Publicity

During eight weeks of July and August the Academy sponsors a naval camp. Every camp cadet is taught swimming, the rudiments of seamanship, rules of the road, and handling boats under oars and sail. Fishing trips off Barnegat Light and short sight-seeing cruises to Atlantic City and New York are part of the summer program.

The site near Barnegat Bay on the south side of Toms River, N. J., is an unusually attractive one, easily accessible by road and rail, and within two hours' easy drive from the metropolitan areas of New York, Philadelphia, and Atlantic City.

The Academy has a well-balanced academic and administrative staff operating under the direction of Rear Admiral S. S. Robison, U. S. N., retired, a former Superintendent of the United States Naval Academy; Brig. General Cyrus Radford, U. S. M. C., Retired; Lieutenant (jg) Dudley Hill, U. S. N. R., Commandant, Captain Earle R. Closson, U. S. Infantry Reserve, Headmaster, and Lieutenant Commander Fred C. Patten.
